General Comment

I support this rule because I feel like this is a very good, efficient way to get tribes federally recognized. The tribes of this nation that are fighting to be federally recognized are people who take pride in who they are and expect the same relations and recognition as any other tribe. The government is held accountable by the treaties, to federally recognize the tribes of this nation. Having the transparency in the whole process not only lets people of the government know what going on but the tribe itself and the potential members. This will also help the process go a lot faster and get done instead of still considering it "broken" by not taking this process seriously enough to make it somewhat of a priority. I am a part of a federally recognized tribe and I could not imagine being on the end of not being recognized as a sovereign nation. Sovereignty is what was promised to us by the government and this rule will only just make it easier to be the nations we once were.
